HINTS to WOMEN READERS

TWO JABOTS AND A CAP.

Some up-to-date dress accessories which will take the attention of the dainty woman are sketched above. The little evening cap in the center is made of gilt lace of rather open mesh and pattern beneath which shows golden brown chiffon. A bow of golden brown velvet joins at the back the band of fur which encircles the head. A modish jabot of lace and velvet is shown on the right. The flat bow and long tab are of black velvet the latter crossed at half its length by a flat band of lace. On the left side is a combination of lace, satin and net which is smart. A piece of side pleated black satin is caught through the center and across this falls a double jabot of lace bordered net.

Latest American Fashions

BY CORA MOORE.

Fashion seems to have expended her best efforts on the afternoon gown, for above all types, it is in that we find the smartest, most distinctive effects. A wider range of materials is available than for either morning or evening dresses, and considerably more liberty is allowable in the matter of design, so it would be strange if the dressmakers had not made something of these advantages.

The length of the afternoon frock is a much discussed question, but needless because it is purely a matter of individual choice. The round length, the narrow train or the long, pointed train or train—some see them all on equally fashionable confections, but, possibly, if any favoritism at all is shown, it is for the round length, that weighted at the hem, draws a bit about the feet.

The sketch illustrates this, as well as tion, veiled with the marquisette, the short sleeves being cut in one with it. Then, rising, are three triangular pieces of velvet drawn loosely up till their points touch the circular neck of the fur and finished with a simple bit of the same embroidery outlines the neck below the fur and shows between the points. The back has but two inches of the fastening between, and the fur appears again edging the abbreviated sleeves and furnishing a foot of the same. The "small fur" worn with this costume are deserving of mention, for they show one of the most telling ways of arranging the little black tails on the plain ermine that has been noticed the whole season. The scarf is a scant yard wide, lined with its own fur and finished across the ends with the tails in fringe fashion, while the pillow muf, with its white satin lining, similarly has the tails arranged fringed in a line down either side of the center. These muf and scarf sets, which have become even more decorative than useful, are too effective to be discarded a moment earlier than absolutely necessary, so we shall be wearing them much later than in past seasons. In fact, a great many fur-trimmed chignon sets, and even the broad scarfs entirely of fur, but lined with a brightly colored chiffon, will be carried around through the whole summer. As furs are treated now they are hardly less soft and pliable nor weightier than fabrics, and they are always delightful.

SARTORIAL HINTS.

By Elizabeth Lee.

There are many elderly women who desire to be always correctly gowned and who have a perfect knowledge of the fundamentals, but are sometimes in doubt as to the details, especially in these days of quickly changing fashions. Not going out as much as formerly, they are apt to lose sight of the small touches which mark the gowning of the up-to-date woman.

A morning costume for winter wear should be of serge, tweed or cheviot. The short, stout woman should choose a smooth surface, while the spare, slender figure will find the thicker materials more becoming to her.

Thicker does not mean heavier, a loosely woven, thick fabric may be only of the same weight as a fine broadcloth, and will be fit in all weathers.

The skirt will be made to clear the ground, and should fit the hips smoothly. The average elderly woman will find it an improvement if the skirt shows pleats at the lower edge, because they will be an aid to a graceful carriage, also a convenience in walking. A narrow panel down the front will be kind to the short woman, while the stout figure should wear her skirt as long as she can without actually touching the floor.

The half-length, semi-fitted coat is the accepted model for the elderly woman, closing at the left side. Most women will find it more becoming to have the right front cut so as to slant a decided angle from the first closing. This is very smart looking and gives a better line than the straight edge. It is a good idea, because the line of the figure is not broken, as it would be by adding ornaments of a contrasting tone, say black braid, for instance.

A short woman is apt to look "patchy" if her figure is cut up at all by such additions. A good idea is a decided air of "made to order" about the suit finished with self-decoration, which every woman desires to suggest by her gowns.

These are some of the details that are so essential to correct gowning, though they may sound quite unimportant. Coat sleeves never go out of fashion, and it may be said a man's collar is ever a proper finish to a suit.

Black is always in good taste, while navy blue—a staple color—is very generally becoming.

For rough knockabout wear the tweeds are excellent. They are also fabrics that do not really show stains or soil. The hat for wear with a tailored suit should be of the stiff, ready-to-wear order in a medium size, not necessarily the same color as the dress.

Black may be worn when the wearer is tall if she so prefers. Navy with a navy suit and brown with a brown suit is always good, but there are a few other colors which are more attractive when combined with black. A gray hat, for instance, is not always a success. A dark red hat will harmonize with a gray dress and be found becoming to almost every type of middle-aged woman.

Gloves should be of substantial kid or castor, preferably tan color. Shoes should be neat, well fitting and cut high.

A veil of fairly fine mesh with a small dot is a pretty finish to a tailored suit.

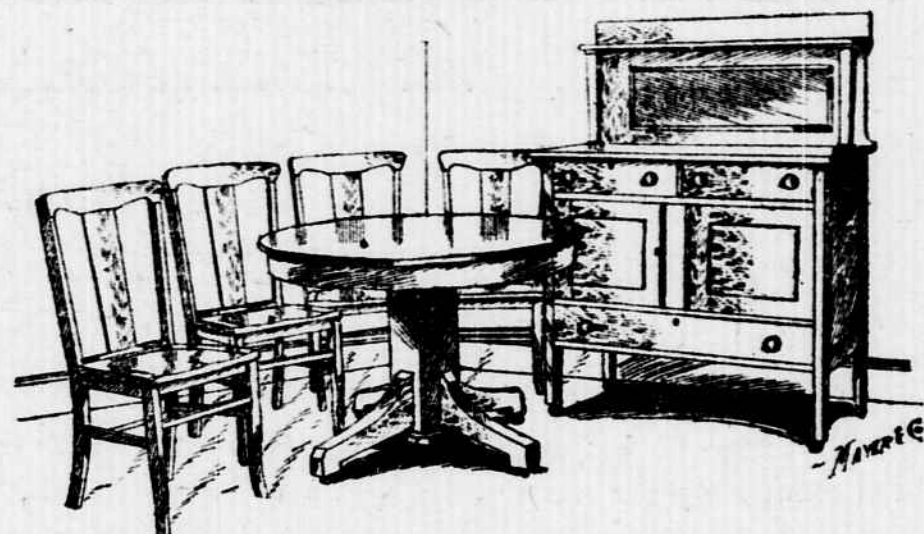

The waist will be of a weight to suit the wear, but it must be plainly tailored. Personal preferences, too, are allowed when it comes to the neck finish. Some women look better in the stiff linen collar and tie, others become the softer effect of lawn stock decorated with a little handwork.

Furs may be added, but all such accessories as chiffon boas and fancy muffs are not in good taste worn with a morning toilet.

The Breton Sailor.

All kinds of materials have been utilized in the making of hats, and string will have to vie with brocade for feminine favor. Gorgeous brocade made up of metallic laces is to be one of the popular fabrics. Terry velvet in soft exquisite colorings is another, and then comes the Turkish towel hat in natural coloring, trimmed with velvet and glistening buckles or waving ostrich plumes.

Among the other new hats there is a smart shape called the Breton sailor, for wear with the spring tailored dress. Made of black straw, the hat rests all the way round, and it has very little trimming, a knitted brim on the top and a knotted cord of black silk tied at the side encircling the crown.

Powder Puffs.

To remove ink stains from the hands, rub the juice of ripe tomatoes over them and rinse in warm water. Use a pure soap, rinse the hands well and dry them thoroughly, and it will greatly lessen the inclination to chaps. A very healing lotion which can be used before retiring and during the day, if desired, is made of glycerin, one ounce, and lime-water, one-half ounce.

And, as for Style—

there is nothing better than Pictorial Review fashions. You see, they are furnished by the American Fashion Company, which has offices in every fashion center in the world and supplies the styles to practically all the big cloak and suit manufacturers. Their fashion plates simply must be right—or they lose their trade—and they must be furnished several months in advance of the retail selling season. So it is easy to understand why Pictorial Review styles are offered you perhaps even before the dry goods stores can.

Pictorial Review Patterns

are thus sixty to ninety days ahead of all others. Thousands of women have learned this by comparing the different pattern publications—and, incidentally, seeing for themselves that not only are Pictorial Review fashions newer than any other, but they Are More Economical.

Because of the two free Guides included with every Pictorial Review pattern, you can lay out your material just as economically as the best professional cutter. No other pattern maker can use these Guides, so he must allow at least half a yard more goods than we do—and remember, you pay for this extra material from which you receive no benefit.

In each Pictorial Review pattern, as we have said, is a patented Cutting Guide. This shows how to lay out the pattern correctly—and just as scientifically as an expert cutter could do, so as to use the least possible material. There is absolutely no chance of making mistakes—no chance of cutting two backs or two fronts, no chance of wasting an inch anywhere.

With each pattern, also, is a patented Construction Guide, showing how to produce a perfectly fitting garment with absolute certainty. There can be no home-made look about a garment made from Pictorial Review patterns: it looks right, fits right and stays right.

All this leads us to say: When you select your patterns from the Pictorial Review Spring Fashion Book you do not run the risk of having your dress out of date as soon as it is made.
